At the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic, it was unclear whether or not working from home would become a long-term solution to keep the coronavirus numbers from surging. Now, many offices have announced that they won't be reopening until at least 2021, and some are even considering a permanent work-from-home lifestyle. Because of this, one thing is apparent: home offices are now a must.

One of the most crucial elements to creating a productive workspace at home is having the right chair. If you're looking for the perfect chair for your remote setup, there are three important factors to consider: comfort, style, and price. If you have the money and are looking to invest in a new chair that you'll use for years to come, you may be open to buying one of the top office chairs that we tested here at Reviewed. However, all of the chairs we tested were over $100, so if you're looking for a more affordable solution to get you through this temporary situation, those options may not be for you. Luckily, though, there are a lot of great budget options out there.

After searching for office chairs still in stock for under $100, we found some great options at Staples, Office Depot, and Wayfair that come highly recommended by owners.

1. A classic leather chair

A classic leather chair

You can't go wrong with a classic leather chair like this one from Staples. It's a top-seller online with 4.4 stars and over 1,000 positive reviews. It's particularly loved for its easy assembly and good quality. It's also said to have excellent back support, though some reviewers noted that the back height wasn't ideal for super tall people.
