On this day 100 years ago, October 16th, 1963, to be exact, brothers Walt and Roy Disney started a little company called Disney Brothers Cartoon Studio. The studio would later be renamed The Walt Disney Company and 100 years later, it's a massive media and entertainment conglomerate beloved by people all over the world.

Whether you're a fan of Disney's in-house animated films, Pixar, Star Wars, or Marvel, there is something to love for everyone at the House of Mouse. If you're in a festive mood because of this great milestone, there are many ways you can celebrate. Here are some of the things you can do for Disney's centennial, from watching the movies to cooking dishes inspired by them. Happy 100th Disney, and here's to 100 more!

Stream Disney Plus to relive the magic

What better way to celebrate this milestone than by watching the movies that have made Disney such a cultural mainstay these past 100 years? All of Disney's offerings are on its streaming platform, Disney+. You might not have time to watch all of the Disney movies, but you can certainly rewatch your favorites or watch Disney's first-ever feature film, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, in anticipation of its newest feature film, Wish, which releases on November 22.
